

Michael Barone wrote a piece in the Wall Street Journal titled "How ObamaCare Misreads America". In that, Mr. Barone lists several assumptions Obama&Co made, designing this masterpiece. Mr. Barone is an excellent writer, but in this piece, he missed the mark by a mile. A statement ("...apparent failures to anticipate the behavior of fellow citizens...") in his last paragraph clearly shows, he feels something is missing, or the piece has not reached full depth. His observation is correct, because he has not gone into full depth.

I have been writing for years about the modus operandi flowchart for socialist liberals, but let me recap here:

- 1) Imagine (-dream up) a perfect system, by completely disregarding facts, reasons, common sense, logic, and most of all, the "basic human element" factor;
- 2) Get pissed, arrogant, "I dunno", and start to practice boldfaced lie, when the populous does not comply, and your dream does not work;
- 3) If the populous still does not comply, get forceful, using "end justifies the means" tactics which in the majority of cases contains lawlessness, and even gangster elements;
- 4) When the entire system collapses, get defensive and take another "I dunno" cover.

To see where Obama&Co is, let's review some history.

Between 1917-1989 people across nine time zones were actually thought in schools, that they live in socialism, and work toward communism. They were thought Carl Marx's theory, that in communism, everyone works based upon the person's abilities, and consumes based upon the person's needs. Therefore, in communism, we will not use money. People will wear a pair of shoes, and when the shoes fall apart, walk into a shoe store and take another pair off the shelf (I am not making this up; you cannot make up this level of idiocy). The obvious (I mean: "obvious" to everyone but to those who imagined this) component they left out was the "human element"; the fact that there might be people who don't want to work based upon their "abilities", and people who might want more than one pair of shoes. Furthermore ("horribile dictu") it might be the case that precisely those people want more pairs of shoes, who do not feel like getting up at dawn and work to their abilities all day. This peachy exercise cost roughly 25 million lives (WWI & II are not included in this figure), and the complete misery and ruined lives for roughly 700 million people.

...then came 1989, and the Berlin Wall went down.

It didn't take long for these social-liberal numnuts to find another venue. They called it the "European Union". The story is well known by everyone, even by people who don't know more than the EU is in deep trouble, that Spain has 32% unemployment, that Greece is on the constant verge of bankruptcy, and so on (I wrote more than a dozen pieces on the topic). But the aspect that belongs here, as follows: the close to eight decade worth of Marxist experiment was not enough to this always dreaming social liberal crowd in Europe, so they thought they will take another whack at it. Apparently, no one in Europe heard the "Definition of insanity is to do the same over and over again, expecting different results" mantra, and they never heard Einstein's observation that "You cannot start to solve a problem in the same way, the problem was caused in the first place". Without going into details, these social liberals in Europe assumed (where did I hear this word last??Yes! In Mr. Barone's piece about Obama&Co!), that by hoisting the blue flag (with a whole bunch of stars in it), the French will start to have 44 hour work week, the Italians will take 30 min lunch break, the Greeks will be as above board as day,....get the point? So now, they managed to create roughly 320 million unhappy, pissed people between London and the Eastern border of Hungary, roughly 65% of them are either bankrupt or getting close, 35% are pissed that they have to support the 65%. The Germans also found themselves in a situation where –after they robbed Western and eastern EU blind in two separate ways- there is nothing else to take, but countries they took everything from, now are so poor, the Germans have to support them. And the German populous is getting mighty pissed about the situation. All (let me repeat: A-L-L) because these social-liberals –again- forgot the “human element”. That Greeks will always be fun people but will always “take care the number one”, that Italians love three hour lunch, that a Frenchman will die (or start a revolution) before he will work a minute over 35 hour a week. These idiots also forgot, that this is how it suppose to work, because we are different. And this difference is the very beauty of the human nature.

...which brings us to Obama&Co, and ObamaCare (which is anything but –I am talking about the “care” part).

Aside of all the mindless arrogance and gangsterism, these social-liberal glazed-eyed sleepwalkers followed the exact flowchart which already caused 25 million dead people, a misery of 700 million, then –in another attempt- imposed a never seen before economic and social hardship on 320 million people. Now these cheap clowns in D.C. try to do the same to another 310 million; at this time it is called The United States of America. So, let’s follow the “socialist flowchart” to see how Obama&Co complies:

Obama&Co’s original premise was the “we need to give insurance to everyone, because this is a disgrace how 30 million Americans don’t have it”. There was a sideshow of “this is a disgrace of insurance companies don’t insure people with preexisting condition”; but this is only for good measure. Let me stop here for a moment, and sort these two issues out.

- First, I have been saying as long as the disgraceful ObamaCare was voted on, that if the federal government spent $2,000 per year per person insuring the 30 million people, the tab would have been 60 billion per year. Adding payments over deductible, the tab would have still not exceeded $80 billion per year. This amounts to $800 billion in ten years. (Just as a reference-- the current ObamaCare estimate is $2.8 Trillion. Oh, and almost forgot!! According to the CBO’s 2014 February report, the CBO estimates 31 million Americans not having health insurance by 2025. In other words, we spend 2.8 trillion taxpayer dollars in ten years to generate 1 million additional people with no health insurance whatsoever. Should someone be in jail?? Just a question.
- I have been holding on to the concept, that there are only two kinds of “preexisting condition”: stupidity and economic hardship. Stupidity, when you can afford insurance but don’t have one, and economic hardship when you cannot afford it. You cannot be cured from stupidity; you have to grow out of it on your own. If you have economic hardship, society needs to help you. The “I was insured, have breast cancer, was fired from my job and now I cannot get insurance” is nota preexisting condition. That is an “insurance transferability” problem.

Our Hussein wanted to do this in the name of “Equality”. Apparently he neither has problem with preaching “equality” in the morning, and throw a $400,000 state dinner at night, nor he ever heard Winston Churchill’s lamentation of “Socialism is a philosophy of failure, the creed of ignorance, and the gospel of envy, its inherent virtue is the equal sharing of misery”.

As “Step 1)” on the flowchart, instead of looking at the current insurance system’s obvious problems (the aforementioned transferability, or tort reform, or “purchasing insurance from across state line), they decided they create the perfect, “dreamlike” (of which everyone but Obama, that arrogant idiot Ezekiel Emanuel, the FaceLift Quin Nancy Pelosi, the US Senate’s chief gangster Harry Reid, and a few other usual morons –the Durbin-Schumer-Menendez-Leahy quartet, knew: it is a nightmare) system, where

- a. Young people, who –by nature- feel invincible will not only buy health insurance, but buy at hugely increased cost, just to support the older folks’ insurance, and
- b. The aforementioned “30 million” Americans, most of whom have never cared about insurance will rush to have one.

There are all kinds of idiotic (I mean, idiotic even by a socialist liberal's -like Obama- standards) ideas, with regards to business, the 30 hour per week provision, that people will be happy to purchase insurance at a much higher price, drop their doctor, roughly 60% of the hospitals are not even in the system, etc., etc., but ObamaCare is standing on the aforementioned two pillars.

To really spice things up, they eliminated –the non existent- “preexisting conditions” creating a system identical to: it is enough if you get a car insurance from the road side when the tow-truck took your car with a burned out engine. In other words, pay a nominal fine per year not having an insurance, ad sign up for one when you are diagnosed with liver cancer. They also took millions of people off work. People, who did not want to work “based upon their abilities” all that much, but they did, just to get insurance. Now, with Obama’s “subsidies”, voila, they don’t have to work while getting the insurance. In short, they (as all enthusiastic socialist would do) did everything against basic human nature, and they expected a desired result. They did not get it.

To build the entertainment portion in, they developed (for a mere $480 million) a web site that would shame a third rate used car dealer in the New Mexico desert. ...and would you believe?? The result was exactly what people with brain predicted.

....so, Obama&Co applied the socialist flowchart’s “Step 2)”

In that, Jay Carney lies every time he opens his mouth, Obama is either in the mental state of “I dunno” or lies into anyone’s face (which is not that easy if you get down to it. I mean Obama even tried to skin the “you can keep your doctor. period” cat), Ezekiel hysterically laughs like a hyena, no matter what you ask from him, and they nominated this sorry mumbling idiot, Kathleen Sebelius as their front girl. Some team. But in spite all efforts, the populous still didn’t budge; the number of enrollees are way down, they are even lying about the “so how many “enrolled” people actually paid??” topic, the young/old compositions is totally out of whack, and –would you believe it?- sick people signed up in droves (as people with brain expected). In other words, the s--- stinks.

....which made Obama&Co arrive to Step 3)

I mean if Nixon was kicked out of presidency for a cover up of a third rate burglary, Obama should not be president since mid 2009. But putting that aside, he –in spite of all efforts to teach him, plus he supposed to be some kind of professor on constitutional law (well he wasn’t born in Kenya either though)- still thinks he is Louis XIV. He -with all his law degree-, still has difficulty understanding what the “Executive” word in the “Executive Branch” of the government means. “To Execute”. Obama must have short memory too, because (to the greatest tragedy to our nation) he had to repeat the Presidential Oath twice: “....I will faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States...”Which means lotus blossom, you don’t get to create laws, you only execute them. So, if the Congress passes the law, stating both the individual and the employer mandates of ObamaCare start on a certain date, you cannot change it, no matter how much you want to. As a result of Obama’s illegal and lawless activities, this thing does not even resemble to the one the US Congress (shamefully) voted on. But people still not signing up, the composition is still horrible, and the hole ObamaGarbage is still in a death-spiral.

To illustrate Obama’s close parallel with “great forebears” let me make this note: looking back all the way to LBJ, I don’t recall a single president tagging 5 million people and their problem (caused by the same president) as a “minor segment of the population” issue. You know, we have 100 million, that’s “only 5%”. It brings back two memories: one of the forebears said “when you chop wood you will have chips falling”. He meant, if you kill 10 million people, you obviously will kill a few ones you didn’t want to, butthe chips are falling. He was Joseph Stalin. Another one lamented to Richard Nixon: “in a nuclear war, I will have 200-300 million deaths, but still have 700 million left” (Mao Zedong). Until Obama, I do not recall anyone else with the “it is a minority issue” concept over the last several decades.

So gang, this is where we are. We are in a bad fix. But, as Winston Churchill said: “Every people has the government it deserves”. Make no mistake about it, we do deserve to be in a bad fix. We (you) voted for him. Twice. The root of ObamaCare is the fact that he, as all other social-liberal morons keep dreaming about the perfect world, and gets pissed when it was not realized. No, they don’t get pissed at themselves. That would be too much to ask. They get pissed at everyone else (as Joseph Stalin famously said, “If the government and the people disagree, we replace the people”), and immediately start to look for the next venue, the next country, where they get a chance to try their idiocy. But (since 1917), they keep living the “human element” out of the equation. They do it, because with that in, the model would fold like a cheap suit.

Let me give a (free) crash-course on that topic (by not hoping that any of these people will learn). The deal is this: people (the human animal) in large percent behave based upon how you condition them. In young age, it is called “upbringing”, “discipline”, “teaching”, “schooling” etc. We talk about “two parent’s home advantage vs one parent home disadvantage”, “working parents don’t care about their children and they become drug addicts”, we talk about “parents were drug addicts, so their children became one” etc. All these are “conditioning a person for a certain behavior” aka “social behavior”. There are still few places in the world where cannibalism is an excepted social behavior. You know why? Because this is how people were brought up. In some African tribes, people are naked. There are societies where houseguests have the right to have sex with the woman of the house. These are all social models, learned through upbringing and daily interaction with the society. The reason societies have institutions called “police” and “court system” is to enforce the established social behavior. Keep this “enforcement” component in mind for a moment, we will get back to it.

The other component is that there is no one on the planet who prefers hardship against a pleasant living environment (e.g. I do what I want, when I want). So, if you offer people a pleasant living lifestyle by not working, they will get off work. The “minimum wage is just that”: minimum. It conditions people to appreciate more work and more education, for one reason, and one reason only: to further their life conditions. To have a better life. This conditions people, drives people toward bettering themselves. People around me say I am a workaholic, but I am here to tell you: give me $30,000/month, and I will take the speed way back, will do what I love to do, whenever I feel like doing it.

These are the two, most basic gene-level “human element” components which will be present so long as the human animal populates the planet. Based upon them, it is not only easy, but highly rational, common sense and at the level of “my goat understood it” to conclude, that humans must be continuously channeled to a certain direction, otherwise –as a result of the “basic human element”- they will go back to act based upon their born, gene-level instincts: they will look for the easy life.

So, to tie things together, we can say, that a human animal is conditioned from birth, by parents, teachers, schools, coaches, Boy and Girl Scouts, by the church, workplaces, and other entities, in order to make them behave like a river; stay within a defined channel (aka “social behavior”) and continuously flow forward (aka “advance themselves”). The two shorelines of the “river bend” are the “police” and the “court system” dealing with the “overflow”. “Study hard for better grade”, “train ten hours a day, every day to achieve your Olympic dream” “minimum wage”, “working hard to support yourself while in school”, “working in two jobs to support your family”, and many other “work/reward” components are all part of the same “life enforcement” paradigm.

Then came a list of social-liberal morons from Carl Marx through Vladimir Lenin, FDR, Saul Alinsky, Bernadine Dohm, Fidel Castro, Hugo Chavez, all the way to Francois Hollande, Barack Hussein Obama, and (the newest one) Bill de Blasio with the big idea: “Let’s leave the most basic, gene level human element out of the equation, dream that the human animal will act as we want him/her to, and govern based upon that”. It is a close parallel placing a hungry cheetah into a sheep farm because the cheetah stated, she is a vegetarian. It is insane.

This is the fundamental reason why ObamaCare is a sick fantasy and nothing more. After close to 100 years of trying, close to one hundred million deaths well over two billion miserable lives, our Hussein still believes (by the way: aided by several republicans) that “People inherently want to work!!!” No they don’t, if you condition them not to. Accidentally, the “not working” behavior model is the one they were born with.

The entire idea of “all the government has to do is to make people lives nicer and people will keep working hard”; the “cater to people’s life w/o work, and they will still want to better themselves and work”, created welfare generations, skyrocketed out of wedlock pregnancy, destroyed Harlem, and had a long list of other blessings.

And now Barack Hussein Obama tries it again.

For $2.8 trillion.
