

September 16, 2015

....or Germany, Germany Above All ...

And this says it all. I have been the inventor and a long time (unpopular) proponent of the thesis of "There is not another country and culture in the world where Hitler could have pulled his Nazi system off." I have also been saying that the structured precision of assembling a Siemens system or a BMW, Audi, Mercedes or VW car and the reason Hitler succeeded, come from the same root, representing two vastly opposing sides of the same coin. The mindless, not questioning authority, not thinking for oneself, the "just go by the book, and do it with 100% precision" hard wiring in the brain are needed to perform like a robot on your job, ...or get grandma off the train and escort her into the gas chamber. Adolph Eichmann testified about why he did not follow SS General Reinhard Heydrich's order to stop the mass deportation of the European Jews (into death camps): he said "..because the order came down verbally from Heydrich..." That defines "mindlessly following structures."

This keeps coming back to mind since I have been watching Germany's sandbox, called the European Union, and the direct result of it, the "migrant crisis." I wrote extensively about:

- The formation of the EU, and how Germany robbed their fellow members blind through ECB interest rate on the euro;
- While Merkel –wanting to buy green votes- was lying on national TV about her decision to eliminate German nuclear power, she was financing Czech nuclear power development and buying all their capacity for 75 years;
- How she hooked up 37% of Europe's energy supply on Russian energy, giving Russia the upper hand;
- How she single handedly prevented Ukraine to get into the NATO, endangering NATO, Europe and standing knee-deep in the "Russia Occupied Crimea" mud.

But gang, this "migrant crisis" is different. It is the first time how and why Merkel dug a hole not only under her fellow EU members but under Germany and herself too. But this is not the point of this writing. The point is the usual German "Deutschland, Deutschland Über Alles" arrogant mentality, how she wants to fix it.

Let's remember how everything started:
According to the Washington Post 8/27:

"...This week, Germany made a small yet important decision regarding how it deals with Syrian migrants. Instead of deporting the migrants to the first European Union country they arrived in – as Germany was allowed to do for decades under an old E.U. regulation known as the Dublin procedure – it will now instead allow Syrians to remain in Germany and apply for asylum within the country...."

Everyone, with a half a brain (or: no brain at all) knew that by next morning everybody with Arab face will become "Syrian". But, the world celebrated Angie. Even (as it is shown here) the Washington Post writer had no clue what he is talking about. He just didn't understand that this "small but yet important" decision WILL END EUROPE AS WE KNOW IT. Just as a side note, I warned everybody in my September 6th comment in the WSJ, saying: “Keep this blog saved will you?? I give six months the absolute most, before Germans will start to hate these migrants. In six months, WSJ will write a piece about that.” I had to wait nine days for the prophecy to come through.

September 16, 2015

This brought us to today. Please read the Wall Street Journal 9/14 piece (bold and highlight by me):

“...Germany started imposing document checks for people entering the country Sunday, seeking to stem the tide of migrants streaming in by suspending a cornerstone of European integration: open borders. The temporary border controls—announced on the eve of a European Union interior ministers’ meeting on Monday to find measures to cope with the escalating migration crisis—came as a warning shot to other countries in the bloc. It indicated that Germany, the EU’s largest country and top destination for refugees and other migrants, was prepared to undermine Europe’s treaty on passportfree travel if other countries didn’t take in more of the hundreds of thousands of people arriving from the Middle East and elsewhere in search of a better and safer life.

Calling the move “a signal to Europe,” German Interior Minister Thomas de Maizière said that the government “will live up to its humanitarian responsibility. But the burden connected with the large number of refugees must be distributed in solidarity throughout Europe.”

The decision is an abrupt reversal from Germany’s decision to fling open its doors just over a week ago, when it and Austria agreed to allow in thousands of migrants being held back by authorities in Hungary. “Europe’s idleness in the migrant crisis is starting to push Germany close to its limits,” Economics Minister Sigmar Gabriel told the newspaper Der Tagesspiegel in an interview published on Sunday. ...In recent months, Europe’s open internal borders have meant that refugees and migrants arriving by boat on the shores of Italy and Greece have been streaming toward Germany, drawn by its healthy economy and generous social benefits. ...On Sunday, the German government temporarily shut off all train traffic to and from its southeastern neighbor Austria and ordered federal police to help secure borders in the southern German state of Bavaria. ...German national railway Deutsche Bahn said train services to and from Austria were suspended for 12 hours, at the request of German federal authorities, on Sunday afternoon.....Hungary and several other countries have so far opposed both plans, arguing that quotas would only attract more migrants and that border protection should be EU’s first priority. German officials want other countries to contribute more resources of their own to responding to the migration crisis. Berlin has been insisting that EU member states where most migrants enter the bloc register them, as existing bloc rules mandate. But it is also pushing for new rules that would distribute migrants more evenly across the bloc.

“Those who seek asylum must accept that they cannot simply choose which member state of the European Union offers them refuge,” Mr. de Maizière said. ...The move also comes after a cry for help from Bavaria, a conservative stronghold and the state that has handled most of the arriving migrants over the past days. There has been growing domestic criticism elsewhere of Ms. Merkel’s decision to open the doors....”

Let me translate this for you:

- Germany has been very big on “follow the rules.” They used this line with the Greeks probably 66,000 times over the last 4 years.
- In this “migration” case, Germany created the situation by opening the doors to “all Syrians”;
- Then, they effectively suspended the Dublin Act,..
- They dumped the entire problem (dealing with migrants) into the lap of Hungary, Italy, Greece, Rumania and Croatia....
- They endangered the welfare of Austria,

September 16, 2015

- They caused a problem no one has seen since the 1940s; over the last two weeks, there were time periods when there was no train service between Hungary and Austria and Austria and Germany...

...and the situation started to be clear even for the Germans when Munich was effectively shut down.

Once that happened, it was –once again- made clear how Germany operates. You can safely say that the mindless, unable to think, “Deutschland, Deutschland Über Alles” German arrogance, that has not changed one degree since 1931 came to play. Now, that even a German mind started to grasp the magnitude, they turned around and with the same voice they were encouraging migrants to come, “Angel” Merkel and her cabinet

- Started to institute “document check” at borders; the diagonal opposite of the Holy Grail of the EU;
- Not just that, but they had the face to call it “a signal to Europe”;
- Invented the “burden connected with the large number of refugees must be distributed in solidarity throughout Europe” slogan;
- Criticized Hungary for building a fence, in trying to protect the EU as per existing EU laws, rules and regulations;
- Invented the “Europe’s idleness in the migrant crisis is starting to push Germany close to its limits” line;
- Came up with the “..want other countries to contribute more resources of their own to responding to the migration crisis...” order to their fellow EU members;

What bothers me (although I am not a bit surprised) is the mindless arrogance of Merkel, as she creates a mess, then turns around and ORDERS others to clean it up.

“The temporary border controls don’t mean that the borders are being closed,” spokesman (of A. Merkel; L.O.) Steffen Seibert said. “Refugees will continue to come to Germany. We hope that this can happen in a more orderly process and in a fully European process in which every member state does its duty of solidarity.”

And this is all you need to know and understand about Germany and the EU as a whole.